

I urge the FCC to retain the current rules. Changing the rules to allow more media consolidation will harm the public interest. For example, radio is vital to emergency broadcasting. Further consolidation of ownership means more stations fed by satellite feed, with no human on site to air emergency warnings. Especially in this time of heightened security alert, we should not be replacing locally controlled and operated radio with media conglomerates that are unresponsive to and unable to serve the local community. On June 2nd, I urge you to retain the current ownership rules.
